Objective:

One-day student seminar for III semester students' of 2019 batch was organized. Students were grouped into 4/5 individuals in each group and they selected the topics from their respective syllabi, thereby guaranteeing that the presentations were pertinent and captivating for the audience. Students were able to deliver deeper into their chosen topics, demonstrate their research abilities, and impart their knowledge to faculty and peers through the seminar.

Outcome:

In general, the experience proved to be a beneficial educational opportunity that not only bolstered the students' comprehension of botany but also cultivated within them a sense of accountability and personal investment in their own learning.
